Hi there Richard

Welcome to this week's PeopleEmail.

We've sadly lost two Ozzie Icons in one week!

Steve Irwin and Peter Brock left us within a few days of each other.
They both died while doing what they loved best - pursuing their passions!

Farewell to you both - and to your families - our thoughts are with you!
The recognition being shown by so many is fitting acknowledgement for their individual contributions to this world we live in. In completely different ways - but both significant!

If you're interested in two great websites full of information regarding their respective lives and passions, here they are.

A Tribute to Steve Irwin

I am particularly interested in writing about Steve for many of my own reasons!

There are so many aspects of Steve and his life that can be taken aside and used as individual lessons!

What a package he was!

His ability to maintain an incredible work/life balance whilst still pursuing his passion;
His love of life in general;
His love for his family and his open manner of showing that they were so important to him;
His passion for the environment and saving as much of it as possible;
His love of wildlife and the preservation of same;
His particular passion for the rescue of crocodiles and their relocation to safe environments;
His ability to be himself!

From where I've observed Steve's rise to global recognition (as opposed to fame - which was distasteful for him) it is the last of these amazing list of character attributes that stands out as his greatest achievement. His ability to be himself!

I say this because of my own passion to teach people to be great at being themselves; to Learn the Art of Being You!

Despite any other influences in his life - Steve was Steve!

I watched him in a recent interview by Andrew Denton (shown as a tribute the other evening) and I was fascinated by his spontaneity, even though he was well known for it, I was still fascinated! His wonderful ability to be totally in the moment; completely responsive to his environment; to show his child-like excitement without any restriction; his passion and loving devotion to his family were so evident. It was refreshing to watch! As have all of the other tributes shown over the past week.

Yes - I'm keeping this short today - as nothing else really needs to be said. So I give recognition to a wonderful human being for all of his achievements - and his particular ability to be absolutely marvellous at being Steve Irwin! At just being himself!

Farewell Steve - the world will miss you champ!
